Job Information Center

JOB HUNTING FOR SENIORS

You may be called a senior citizen, boomer or just a member of the 55+ club, but no matter what name you go by you are probably looking for a way to survive the poor economy. Seniors are looking for jobs to help pay bills, supplement retirement accounts or just to feel useful and productive. If you are going to be competing with younger people for jobs, you should keep in mind some of the following tips.

Although training to catch up on new technologies will be helpful it is also important to emphasize to employers your past experience, communication skills, accountability and trustworthiness. Older job hunters need to be creative. Employment doesn't necessarily mean a conventional job. Starting your own business or working from home could be a profitable alternative. Always remember to research the company you are interviewing with and take the time to learn that company's history and goals. If you know the details of a company you can tell the interviewer how your experience can help them. Above all, no matter how long the job search takes, do not become negative or bitter. If you remain positive and emphasize your abilities you stand a greater chance of obtaining the job you seek.

When writing your post interview thank you letter, there is no reason to bring up your career gaps unless you have a strong sense that the employer remains concerned. If that's the case then make a brief statement explaining why you feel you are a strong candidate for the job.

The basic thing to remember is don't try to hide gaps, explain them thoughtfully and completely. If you don't, you run the risk of an employer coming to their own conclusion about your past work history.
